Although legal sports betting is increasingly common, wagering on athletic competitions is often illegal and is conducted through bookmakers, also known as bookies (operating as individuals or for crime organizations), casinos, Internet gambling operations (which are legal in some countries), and other entities. Types and methods The oldest form of sports betting is probably one in which gamblers bet winner take all on the outcome of a contest. Betting on the games and matches of many sports use a system known as a point spread.

A bet on the underdog team grants the bettor the point spread. Pools range from predictions of the outcome of tournaments or the week's roster of games to lotteries consisting of numbers that win if they match a final or partial score.

Fantasy leagues involve bettors' selecting actual athletes for a "fantasy team" before a competition (or season) begins.
