Reviewers are able to earn up to $10 per every 1,000 views their TikTok content receives and get to keep 100% of their earnings. They are paid for organic views generated in the first 48 hours. The price per view gradually goes down as views go up to ensure a fair return for the creator and the brand, the company explains. So the better the video performs within the first two days, the more the creator gets paid.

Anyone 18 years of age or older with a TikTok account can use Bounty. The funding will be used to onboard brands from the company's waitlist of 750+ brands. At present, Bounty works with 30 brands, including Jones Road Beauty, BlendJet, Olipop and Doe Lashes.

Aside from earning money from views, the creator also gets paid when the brand reuses their video in other ways. Brands can view the content created through Bounty's website and can then license it to run as a TikTok Spark Ad - an ad format that lets advertisers place ad spend on user-generated content to boost it to more viewers. They can also use the video in their other paid marketing efforts.

This is possible because creators are granting Bounty a license to their content as a part of their agreement, allowing Bounty to sublicense the content to the brand on their behalf. The creator retains a license to the content, as well. Bounty launched into beta this March and claims "growth has been exponential," according to head of engineering Aaron Decker. "A couple of weeks ago, we only had 800 sign-ups a week. Before that, it was only 500 a week," he said.
