Quora is a platform where people ask questions, that are open to answers from the community of Quora. It was co-founded in 2009 by Adam D'Angelo and Charlie Cheever. In the initial years it was mostly being used by people who were familiar with the Silicon Valley scene. However, in only a year it started getting recognized by a few news stories, and slowly started gaining popularity. You can use Quora to drive traffic to your ecommerce site, to understand topics better, and to familiarise yourself with issues that concern your brand or business. Quora digest questions are highly tailored to your interests on the platform. If you think you are receiving unrelated Quora questions and answers you can pay more attention to what you visit on the platform to understand why you receive this topics.

Why Should I Care About Quora?

Have a positive answer. One of the best things about Quora is that questions often rank high in search results. So your answer could show up in Google searches for years to come. If you publicly bash a competitor and forget about it, eventually they could see it. Stick to answering the question in a positive light. Don't say anything you'd regret saying. Also, avoid using Anonymous to put down your competitors, it makes it obvious that that's what you are. Analyze your data. Which answers received upvotes? How many views did your answer get? Did you get shares? Pay attention to the patterns of your best content. Are they all from a popular category or are the answers more comprehensive? The more you dive into the data, the better understand how to grow your reach on the platform.
